Chief, Operations Group

SUBJECT

Monthly Report -- Swaziland Bureau -- October 1985

I. GENERAL

Ambassador Harvey Nelson arrived in Swaziland on the 7th. Country team members greeted the ambassador at the airport and then attended a dinner for him on the 8th, hosted by DCM Gerald Scott and his wife. On the 10th the ambassador visited the bureau for a general tour and briefing. He had previously served as a political officer in South Africa and expressed keen interest in the bureau's coverage. He asked to receive regularly the bureau's South African press review. On the 14th Ambassador Nelson and other Embassy officers attended dinner at the bureau chief's house to meet the visiting IG team.

II. OPERATIONS

A. Editorial/Monitorial

- 1. On 30 October, South Africa held by-elections in five constituencies located in various parts of the country and in both rural and urban areas. Both the government and observers regarded them as a referendum on State President P. W. Botha's reform policy. Headquarters analysts expressed interest in detailed coverage of the campaign, and the bureau filed considerable material both from the radio and SAPA; but even more from the South Africa press in the bureau's press review. On election night, 30-31 October, the bureau remained open all night to provide prompt coverage. The results trickled in all night, the last being recieved at 0615 local. Although the National Party won four out of five seats, it lost one seat it had previously held to the extreme right-wing Reformed National Party; and its margins of victory in the constituencies it won were cut in half. Both left and right interpreted the results as a victory for the right-wing, but Botha, in a post-election statement, said the results were good considering the unrest and pledged to continue reform.
 - 2. During the month, the Commonwealth countries met and, with Prime Minister Thatcher staving off the worst sanctions, gave South Africa six months to reform or face more than the minimal sanctions imposed.

In response, at a by-election meeting on the 21st, Botha warned the West that sanctions could hurt the U.S. and Europe, noting that a million Americans would lose their jobs if the RSA cut off its export of chrome. The bureau stayed open late to file this 'threat,' although Botha subsequently issued a statement claiming it was not really a threat.

- 3. Rioting broke out in Cape Town during the latter part of the month. Unlike much of the unrest which has been mostly confined to the black townships, much of this unrest touched white residential areas; and one incident, reported fully on SABC-TV, took place in front of a posh white shopping center in the center of the city. On the 25th, SAPA announced that Botha had extended the state of emergency to eight Cape districts, only days after he had ended it in six others. Stone throwing also took place in downtown Johannesburg on two successive Fridays, causing a considerable amount of damage. The first such disturbance came after a meeting to commemorate ANC member Benjamin Moloise, hanged on the 18th despite pleas for mercy from all over the world, including from prominent South Africans.
- 4. At the request of BBC, the bureau arranged with SAPA to receive an advanced text of the SABC comment normally carried by the radio at 0700 local each weekday morning. The commentary is considered to be a highly authoritative statement of government views. The advanced copy is sent priority only to BBC and the wire and bears the FOUO caveat per guidance from MOD. It is then usually sent to normal consumers the following day with a radio sourceline. BBC expressed appreciation for this service and said the commentaries were "extremely useful."
- 5. On the 2nd, Swazi Prime Minister Bhekimpi announced the ouster from the Liqoqo of Prince Mfanasibili and George Msibi and the firing of Commissioner of Police Majaji Simelane, which the bureau filed immediate from Mbabane radio. Although Mfanasibili and Msibi held no high government positions, they were regarded as being the de facto rulers of the country. Subsequently, it was announced that the Liqoqo had been downgraded from being the "supreme council of state" to merely the "council of state." At the end of the month, it was announced that the Crown Prince, now attending school in England, would be crowned next year. Mfanasibili was quoted as saying cryptically: "Sometimes it thunders in Swaziland and men are swept away." At an impromptu country team meeting on the 2nd, DCM Gerald Scott highly praised the bureau for its rapid processing of the statement, which was first announced in SiSwati. The statement was also provided to the British High Commission.
- 6. On the 24th, the bureau provided reaction to President Reagan's speech at the United Nations proposing Soviet-American cooperation in dealing with Third World disputes, one of which is in Angola. RSA President P. W. Botha and Foreign Minister Pik Botha both highly praised the speech and agreed with Reagan's assessment of Angola. Luanda Radio reported the speech, but failed to report the portions dealing with the conflict in the country except for noting Reagan's pledge to continue supporting "counterrevolutionary organizations" in Angola and elsewhere.

B. Lateral Services

1. The director of AID in Swaziland asked to receive the bureau's file on Mozambique. USAID Swaziland is handling much of the new AID program being put into Maputo and Embassy personnel regularly travel there.
